Sewanee
Breslin Tower

Greetings

Sewanee

I

In the morning at the dawning,
Through the mystic mellow haze,
When a-streaming and a-beaming,
The infant morning rays
Break with splendor o'er the mountain
And above the wooded crest
Deck in amber sheen and saffron
The towered city's breast;
Oh, how mystic through the stillness,
Sweeter than the songster's lay,
Is the chiming, rhyming greeting
That fair Breslin bids the day.

II.

It is noontide of the June day,
And no shadow seeks the earth;
All the world's awake and smiling
All her children filled with mirth,
And Sewanee's sons, at pleasure,
Stroll the oft-frequented way,

And their melodies resounding
Thrill the crystal summer day.
Hushed are all now, for the moment,
Motionless, each fragrant flower;
While the stately bells of Breslin
Chime the joyous midday hour.

III.

At the even when the shadows
Fall fantastic from the trees,
And the scarlet West in splendor
Breathes its farewell on the breeze,
When the day is almost ended
And its cares have flown before,
Then the peaceful bells of Breslin
Raise their gladsome voice once more
And the singing and the ringing
That reverberate and swell,
Tell the story of our glory
And forevermore shall tell.

John Bell Henneman, M. A., Ph.D.

Dedication

TO the memory of John Bell Henneman, our late beloved Professor of English and Dean of the Department of Arts and Sciences, this book is reverently and lovingly dedicated. His wide knowledge of the needs of the South, his great belief in the future of the South, his reverence and love for the South's traditions, and his unusal scholastic ability, all combined to make Dr. Henneman recognized throughout the nation as an untiring and capable leader in the cause of education.

In the world of letters, he was an editor, a critic, and an author of enviable reputation.

Sewanee, to which he gave his last eight years, the ripest years of his life, owes to him an undying debt of gratitude. He loved Sewanee, he loved Sewanee's ideals, and he strove for Sewanee and for Sewanee's ideals. His great force of character and the moral stimulus to those who worked with him and under him, the influence toward the high and noble which he exercised over the student body, were perhaps the things which made him of most value to Sewanee. Each student, each man at Sewanee, might truly call him friend. He was the great Dean of Sewanee.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, S.T.D.

The Chancellor

Bishop Gailor's biography in figures and titles is, briefly, as follows:

Born in Jackson, Miss., September 17, 1856; M. A. from Racine College 1876; Graduate of General Theological Seminary 1879; deacon 1879; priest 1880; Chaplain and Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Sewanee 1882–1889; Vice-Chancellor 1890–189 ; S. T. D. from Columbia University 1890; Assistant Bishop of Tennessee 189 –189 ; Bishop of Tennessee 189 ; Chancellor of the University of the South since 1908; warm friend, wise supporter, and integral part of the University since 1882.

If one came to Sewanee in the eighties and early nineties he heard of "the University where Mr. Gailor preaches." And Mr. Gailor's preaching consisted of teaching, guiding and loving the students as a personal friend and sympathetic confidant. It is beautiful to hear the "old boys" of the early nineties tell of how Mr. Gailor shared their joys and sorrows with equal feeling. At once he was the compassionate and appreciative foster-father and the executive head and disciplinarian, and his optional advice as Chaplain and compulsory decrees as Vice-Chancellor were obeyed alike by the students who hardly knew the one from the other, so distinct was the wisdom and justice of both. He was equally capable "to warn, to comfort, and command."

Since these days, though separated more from Sewanee in body, the present Chancellor as Mr., Doctor, and Bishop has ever been one whose heart is here and whose undying interest never lets an opportunity slip to do any student or the University as a whole all the good that is in his power.

The Vice-Chancellor

Benjamin Lawton Wiggins, M. A., LL. D., Vice-Chancellor of the University of the South, is hardly known in Sewanee. The man whom Sewanee knows is "the V. C." This man is known well to all, and the more one knows him the more one wants to know him. To know him is to respect him for his ability, to admire him for his character, and to love him for himself. Dr. Wiggins is one whom Sewanee claims as her own and proudly does she assert her claim. And the one who most of all recognizes this claim and declares its right is Dr. Wiggins himself. He has given his life to Sewanee. He is the legitimate and welcome successor of those who have made Sewanee possible. No one of them has more freely given that which he had to give than has our own V. C., and his life is a gift whose benefits will endure long after he is gone.

Those who were so fortunate as to witness the magnificent devotion of such men as Bishops Polk, Otey, and Elliott, the men who conceived the idea of the University of the South, were thankful for their good fortune; and likewise, we who live in Sewanee today, are as thankful as they that we are permitted to see the same devotion alive in Dr. Wiggins, who is making the grand conception of the founders a noble reality. All Sewanee is harmonious in saying, "O, may 'little Benjamin our ruler' long, long, be our V. C."

Benjamin Lawton Wiggins, M. A., LL. D.

When the Tale is Told

The tale is told: We gently sigh
Half-sadly thus to say "Good-by"
To those staunch comrades that we knew
We call them up in brief review,
And turn the pages silently.

Here—here is where our hearts beat high
With hope—and here the shadows lie—
What has become of their angry hue
When the tale is told?

But let them pass!—all things must fly.
And so, perchance must you and I.
Our joys—and yes—our sorrows too,
But looking back we're glad 'tis true
We can the high lights alone descry
When the tale is told.

St. Luke's Hall

Ecological Department

St. Luke's Memorial

Theological Department

TO one who has spent a great part of his college career both within and without the ivy covered walls of our dear old dormitory, the words, "Saint Luke's," convey a world of meaning. We can remember when, with all the wisdom of a young "Academ," we pitied the poor "preachers" who were condemned to a life of penance and ascetic devotion. But, when with much fear and trembling, upon that memorable day, we timidly enrolled ourselves among the "pure in heart" what a joy it was to find that we had arrived in the midst of a band of whole souled, cheerful young men, each of whom would stand by you in your sorrows as well as in your joys.

It would be impossible to say anything about St. Luke's without considering the postulents; and what a variegated band we find here, almost "all sorts and conditions of men" are in their ranks, songsters galore, from one who can growl daily in a raucous bass in a vain attempt to "Fathom the mighty deep," to the clear voiced baritone, who strums his guitar, and complains to the ceiling of being left "Alone upon the Housetops," not to mention the tenor who cries aloud for the times when the bees will once more return to the hives. But these are not the only kinds of musicians that this strange crew possesses; there are others who find no difficulty in pounding out "Sewanee Tigers" or other classical selections on the piano in the room of our long-suffering but kind-hearted matron. But with all their faults we love them still and would not be without them

We are all familiar with the fact that three great divisions constitute the Theological Department; Juniors, Intermediates, and Seniors; but it is not everyone who is familiar with the units which compose each and every one of these parts.

We first encounter the Juniors, the class of 1911, whose numbers as a general rule, are possessed with the semi-postulentical manners and ideas as a result of their recent contact with the sinful world. It is hardly to be expected that they should be as sane and saintly as the rest of their brothers in St. Luke's, and we must not be amazed if we hear of one of them arising at 5 A. M. to split up countless cords of wood in the Chaplain's back yard,—it may be his conscience for all we know. Again, why should we be surprised to see the graceful South Carolinian starring on the ball-room floor, or anywhere else when ladies are present; only consider that he has only been here eight months, and you can easily understand why he has not yet entered into the ascetic spirit of St. Luke's. Do not judge the Juniors too harshly; they may become Seniors some day, and who can tell but that it may be your good fortune to sit under their pulpits at some far distant time?

Even the Intermediate Class already begins to show how easily a Junior can develop. "When I was a child, I spoke as a child," says the Intermediate with a self-satisfied sigh upon thinking that he has put away all puerile things. This is one class where numbers do not count, where quantity is absolute nil, and quality reigns supreme, only glance at its personelle and you can easily believe this statement. Where else in the world can you find a red-headed man burdened with such a name as "Gruenstein," who reads and studies everything from the St. Louis "Globe-Democrat" to the "Divine Comedy" of Dante Alighieri. I dare say, too, that the class of 1910 is the only organization now existing which contains a man, who in two years, can take the degrees of B. A., M. A., B. D., and PH. D., carry an unlimited number of Theological classes, teach innocent, young Academic students Botany and Zoölogy, and at the same time preserve enough calmness of mind to appear in Miss Hall's room every evening after supper and warble in a rich heavy bass, many sweet songs from the classics. As to the remaining portion of the class,—modesty forbids.

Now comes the most difficult part of our task, to speak in a few words about that great and distinguished body of men known as the Seniors; for be it known that we have reached the very acme of perfection. How can we describe in a few words even one of its members such as "Roberts," the indefatigable giver of pink teas, the untiring missionary and the walking almanac. Ask him for information on any line and you will be sure to receive some answer; whether it be right or not, only time and experience can show. But we must not overlook the other members of 1909, who are soon to leave us. How much will we miss the large, angular figure of our dear friend Simon, and soon we will realize how glad we are to have the jovial punster of Alabama, or the petit père from France. We only know that they have reached the goal for which we all strive, ergo, longum, rego vivant.

With this sketch of varied and various types we must turn another page of "The Spirit of the Mountain." Many things we have left unsaid and for such I cry "Peccavi."

Whether we may fill an exalted or humble position, it behooves us to conduct ourselves with courage and dignity, with steadfast purpose and never failing hope, ever preserving in perfect harmony the physical, mental and moral balance that should exist in every man if he is to pose before the worldas the noblest work of God.

A Suggestion—Ring her up

LAW
Davant's

The Law Department

THE Law School is at once a collection of individualities and a unit. In order to separate it into departments, classes, or any corresponding classification, it would be necessary for the one who attempted such a task to seek out the motive which impelled each man to become a member of this department. Probably he would not find any two cases exactly alike. Here is one who, having found it inconvenient to remain in the Academic Department any longer for reasons of scholarship, is attracted to the study of law by the exceedingly small amount of work which his legal friends seem to be called upon to do. (Mark my use of the word "seem.") Another, desiring to be identified with this noble institution of learning, and as yet uncertain as to the lifework for which he is peculiarly fitted, enrolls himself in the Law Department in order to bridge the period of his uncertainty. Again, here is an athlete, who, thinking that the profession should be represented on football or baseball fields, condescends to cast his lot with us. And then, behold the ambitious youth, who imagines that he sees here an easy path to fame, who has visions of a seat on the Supreme bench awaiting patiently his occupancy. After passing over the various and sundry other motives which swell the numbers of this limited fraternity, it warms the cockles of our legal heart to come to a student—really a student—who has chosen law as his lifework, who looks to it at once as a means of daily bread and a way to power. His ideals are high, but he hopes to reach them only by long years of earnest application. He is aware of the difficulties which lie between him and his degree, but welcomes them as stepping-stones to prominence in his profession.

Thus we each carry into the room on the third floor of the Walsh a different conception of the Law Department. But when we pass out the door, we have entered into that oneness which is our peculiar distinction. We have realized that this is truly "our" department, that it will be what we make it. And we are resolved to give to it our best in every way. We are struck by the interest which our Dean and Instructor manifests in each one's welfare and success. As men of honor we must not fail him. Lastly we see laid open before us, a great opportunity—one which we would be fools to let slip. So within the breast of each is born a profound resolution to grasp it.

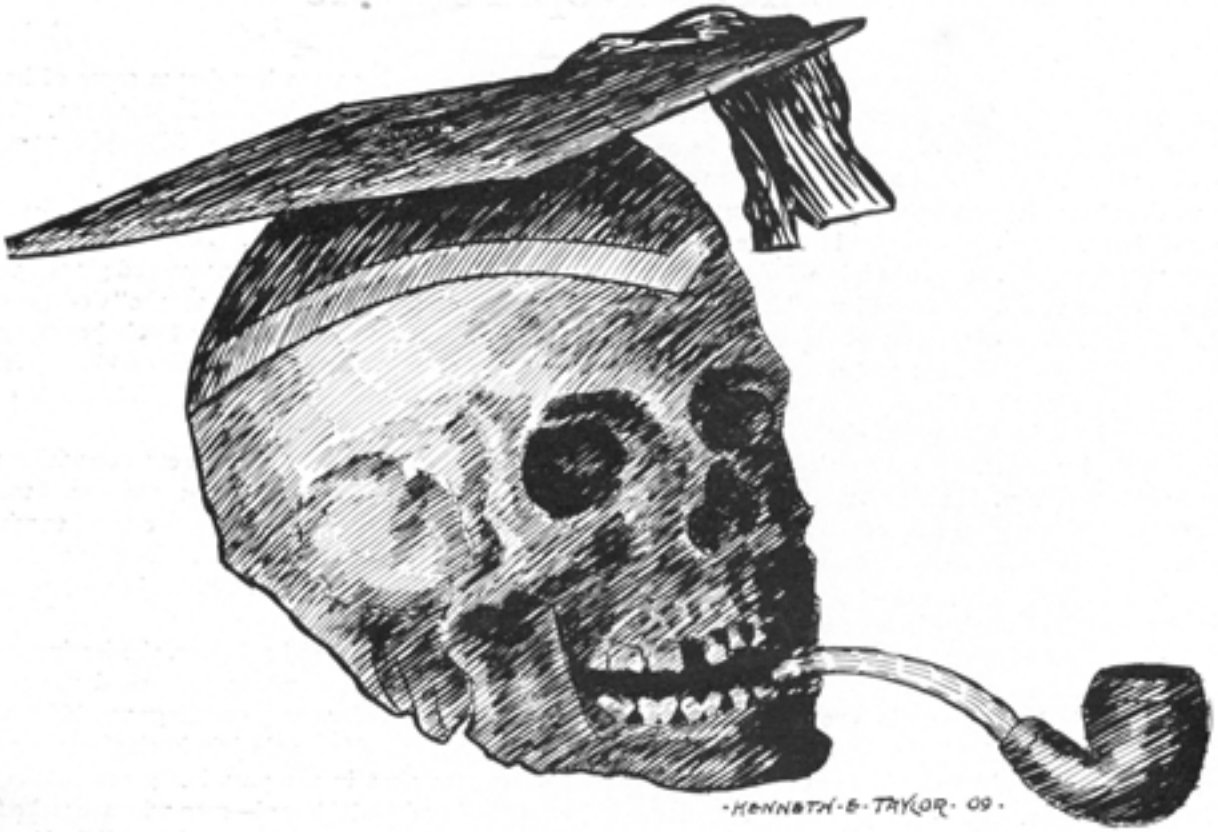

He who would understand the true purpose and value of the Law Department, must be enrolled among its chosen few, must share alike the labor and the rest, the limited, class periods and the all day, unlimited "exams." You poor benighted loafers of other departments, scoff not at what you do not comprehend.

Medical Department

Medical Department

THOMPSON Hall, with its gloomy recesses, its winding creaky stairs, its bewildering shelves of bottles and its rows of grooved tables heaped high with promiscuous bones—Thompson Hall, with its rattling skeletons, its grinning skulls, and its gory upper floor, is the stronghold of the Medical Department. Here the devoted disciple of Aesculapius satiates his thirst for the knowledge of the "inner man." Here Dr. J. S. Cain, Father of the Art of Healing, presides over his drowsy afternoon classes; and here the unwary Academ, returning home late at night, pauses awe-struck, to listen to the suggestive drip-drip-drip of clotted gore.

Not so the Medical student. Dead men's bones at midnight have no terrors for him. Picture him at his studies, if you can, a "Gray's Anatomy" spread out before him in the dim light of a shaded lamp, lovingly fingering some ancient rib or forearm, and ever and anon gazing affectionately at the skull that decks his mantle-piece and which holds in mockery a half-smoked cigarette between its crumbling teeth.

And yet the Medical Student is not so completely absorbed in the contemplation of things harrowing to ordinary mortals that he can find no time to devote to other phases of college activity. He smokes his cigarette and drinks his daily "dope" with as much nonchalance as the much-practiced Theologue; his ties are of as gaudy a hue and his potential mustache is the envy of every budding minister.

In the past, Sewanee has drawn some of her brightest Athletic stars from the Medical Department. The haughty Academ will look long in the archives of Sewanee Athletics before he will find the peers of Colmore, Lee and Eph Kirby-Smith, Lemoine, Miles Watkins and, of later date, good old "Doc" Sheppard. And despite these high and mighty Juniors and Seniors in tattered gowns, the School of Medicine is a necessity even to the "College of Arts and Sciences." How many lagging Soph hopes against hope for the return of some Gaither to coach him in his Math? Or a "Happy" Burke to make him sick on short notice that he may cut classes for a day?

Verily Sewanee would not be Sewanee without the Meds. How could the Mountain exist without Staurday-night torch-light processions of white-robed ghosts with skull and cross-bones, chain and coffin? Who would then hold hilarious Commencement banquets in the sacred precincts of the E. Q. B.?

Despite the scoffing Theologues, the jeering Academs and all, the Medical Department has stood the test of time turning out men of whom any college would be justly proud. And so let all the Mountain join in singing the praises of the Department that in the past has graduated some of her most distinguished Alumni—men who are to be found in all parts of the world reflecting credit on their Alma Mater and carrying deep in their hearts a lasting affection for old Sewanee.

Academic

Academic Department

THE lordly Senior, stretched full length on the couch, puffing at an odiferous pipe, glanced up with a grunt of welcome as the Freshman, whom he had taken under his wing, entered the room and seated himself on the table.

"Fixed up all right, rat? Registered with Grandfather Noll? Got your schedule from Tabby Nuts? Mrs. Preston gave you a room all right, didn't she? I'll see Mrs. King and get you put over at our table. Its a wise step you've taken, old man, one you'll never regret. If you hadn't entered the Academ I'd have felt like you'd started off wrong at Sewanee."

The Freshman was listening very attentively to the utterances of his superior.

"The Academ is the whole thing up here—there's nothing else to it. Its just about ninety-nine one hundredths of Sewanee. These other guys with the different colored tassels may say they've got something on us. But deep down in their heart, they'll have to hand it to the good old Academ."

"Take athletics, for instance. Why, almost every fellow on every team takes his seat in chapel under the Proctor's nose. Its the Academs that have the stuff in them that puts Sewanee at the top of Southern athletics and makes every team we meet respect the mountain lads. In debate, in oratory, in every college activity, you'll find us several lengths ahead of the field. Its our ladies' men that make Sewanee famous all over the South for good dancers, that draw girls to the Mountain like a magnet. And mixed in among us you'll find enough students to keep up our standard. Of course we have more fellows than some of the other departments. The reason of this is that there is such a fascination about the Academ's life, about the rip-roaring life we lead at Hoffman or Tucker's, that no one can resist. They just come on in."

"I dare say we cause the Vice-Chancellor and the Dean more or less trouble, but they are good-hearted chaps and easily ragged. There wouldn't be any use of rules if none were ever broken. Proctors? O, they're harmless fellows who keep class and chapel skips and are supposed to stop rough-houses, beer-drinks, poker-playing and the like—but are too innocent to ever catch anybody. They're all so white that we feel pretty mean about making them leave their downy couch about three-thirty G. M. But they are put here and it is our duty to make them earn their money.

"College spirit? Well, I'm glad to say we can't claim a thing on any of the departments there. That don't go by departments. It's instilled into a man as soon as he hits the Mountain. Must be in the atmosphere. If you haven't felt it already, better pack your duds and haul back home. There's something wrong in your make-up. Just wait till Thanksgiving and you'll understand the full extent of Sewanee Spirit. Class, Department, age, every distinction falls before it and every soul at Sewanee, from the smallest choir-boy to Doctor DuBose, yields to the inexplicable feeling in his breast and boards the train for Nashville. Win or lose, we're always behind the Team pushing. That's Sewanee's way."

And now let me take occasion to whisper a few words of gentle counsel into your ear before you get too far on your career. Take whatever ratting comes your way without any bull. Remember you're a rat now, not a Senior in a prep school. Do enough studying to keep in the good graces of the Professors. If you make a killing the first two years, the last two are like rolling down hill. But above all study the eccentricities of the Professors. Laugh at Tabby's jokes even though you've heard them a dozen times before. Also, be always ready and eager to listen to his lengthy bull on athletics. Agree with him whether he's right or not. Roll over in ecstasies of mirth when Dr. Swiggett makes a pun in French. Join Dr. Bishop's Philosophy Club if you get a chance. The others you must learn for yourself. If you do what I say you'll be a success. But remember in everything you do, you must first uphold the honor of Sewanee and then that of the Academ.

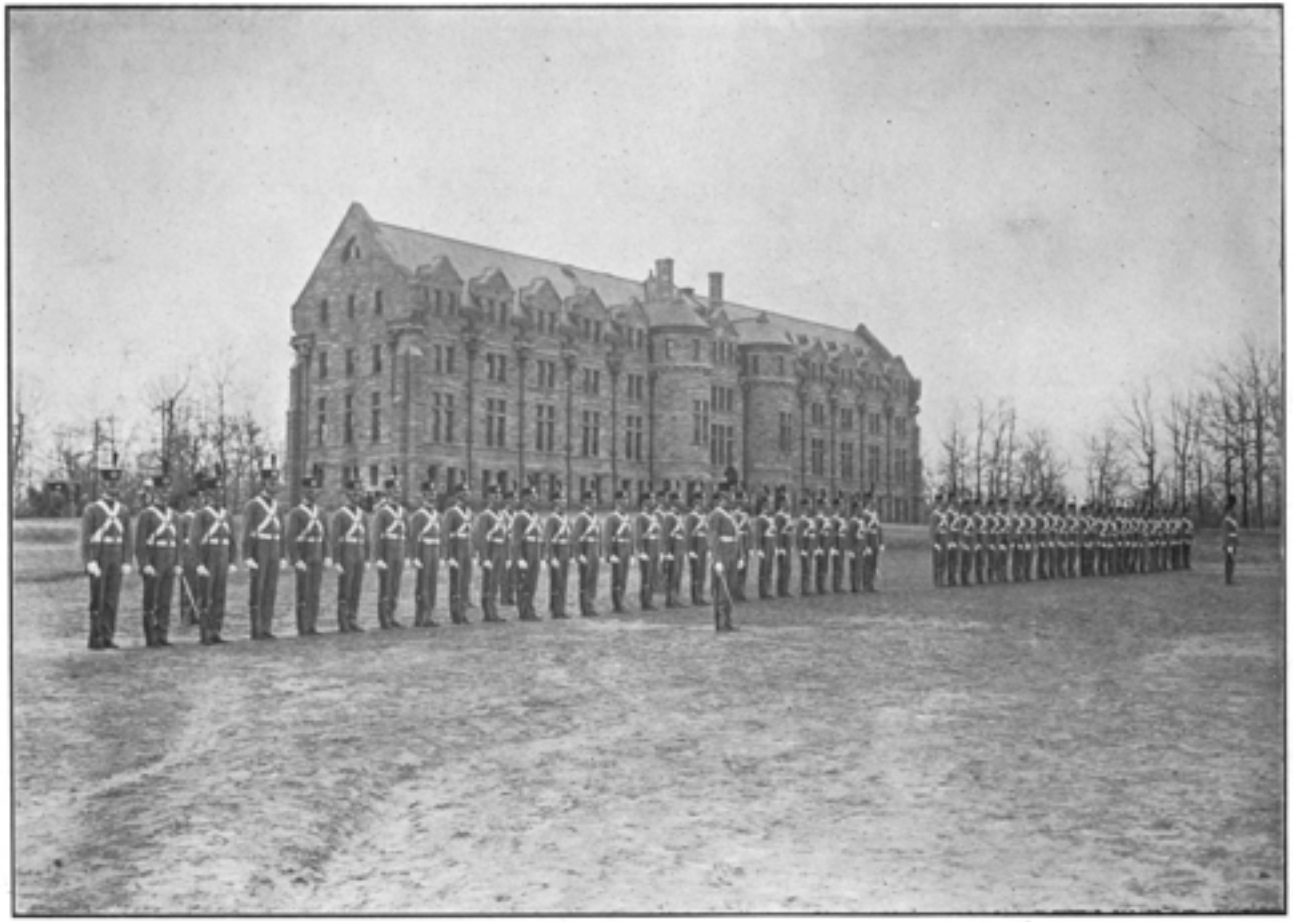

To a Hoffman New Year Party

Now listen my friends all assembled here
To the words that I say ere the close of the year,
Just a eulogy short ere the hour be late
On the Year of our Lord Nineteen Hundred and Eight.
Let us thank the Old Year while yet he may last
For the dances we've danced and the classes we've passed;
Let us thank our Good Hostess to whom the Old Year
Has afforded a chance to assemble us here.
Let us thank the young ladies, who bring such delight
Into our midst by their presence to-night.
Let us thank Mrs. Preston for keeping us straight
For the Year of Our Lord Nineteen Hundred and Eight.

The Sewanee Military Academy

WITHIN the last year, some very important changes have taken place in the preparatory department of the University and now the institution at the lower end of the mountain might almost be called a new one. To begin with, the Trustees decided in June, 1908, that the name "Sewanee Grammar School" was not suitable to the status of the institution. Consequently, it is now the "Sewanee Military Academy"—and it is certainly "military," the boys are ready to affirm. It will be some time before we cease to say the "Grammar School." But we must yield to the march of progress and take this as a step forward.

In March, 1908, Dr. B. M. Roszel, for the past five years our efficient and popular Headmaster, tendered his resignation in order to accept the principalship of the "Shenandoah Military Academy." Mr. E. F. Strong, Principal of the Houston School, Spokane, Washington, was elected to fill the vacancy. At almost the same time, Major Mason Carter, Commandant for the past eight years, decided to retire from all service and resigned his position. Captain A. C. Gillem, Seventh U. S. Calvary, was appointed by the War Department to succeed Major Carter.

The session of 1908–1909 began September 17, under the new regime and name, with an almost entirely new roster of students, about one hundred in number. The excellent discipline and instruction in both the military and academic departments has already placed the institution in the first rank of the smaller military schools in the South. The Winter Term has proven a success and prospects for the ensuing year are unusually bright.

To My Pipe

Away with bright champagne and motley wine,
Take, too, your claret sweet and sparkling beer;
Some awful evil lies in drink, I fear.
Excuse me, friends, your wines I must decline,
For me no wine glass tall, no foaming stein,
You sip from these which you have found so dear,
And leave me now awhile secluded here.
I'll take, good sirs, my old "French Brier" for mine;
In it I've found a true and faithful friend;
From its deep bowl I'll drink a health to all;
And, 'midst encircling wreaths and pillars tall,
I'll dream fame's gilded stairway to ascend.
With joys replete and consolation ripe,
Just let me smoke again my old brown pipe.

The Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D.

Mr. Guerry

On September 15, 1907, Mr. Guerry was chosen Bishop-coadjutor of South Carolina and accepting, ceased active connection with Sewanee. As Academic student, Theological student, Professor, and Chaplain, he had for many years lived at Sewanee and given his all to her interest. Receiving many flattering offers from the largest churches of the country he refused to leave Sewanee, until his native State called him to the highest honor it could bestow. At Bishop Caper's death, he became Bishop in name as well as in fact.

Though he is no longer a resident of Sewanee, we still claim Mr. Guerry as our own, and rejoice that he makes his summer home on the Mountain. To the students, to the Faculty, to all Sewanee, he will always be "Our Mr. Guerry," whom we have known and loved. The results of his long and earnest labors bear evidence to the greatness of this great Sewanee man; but the most lasting evidence is the influence of his life and character on those who have been associated with him.

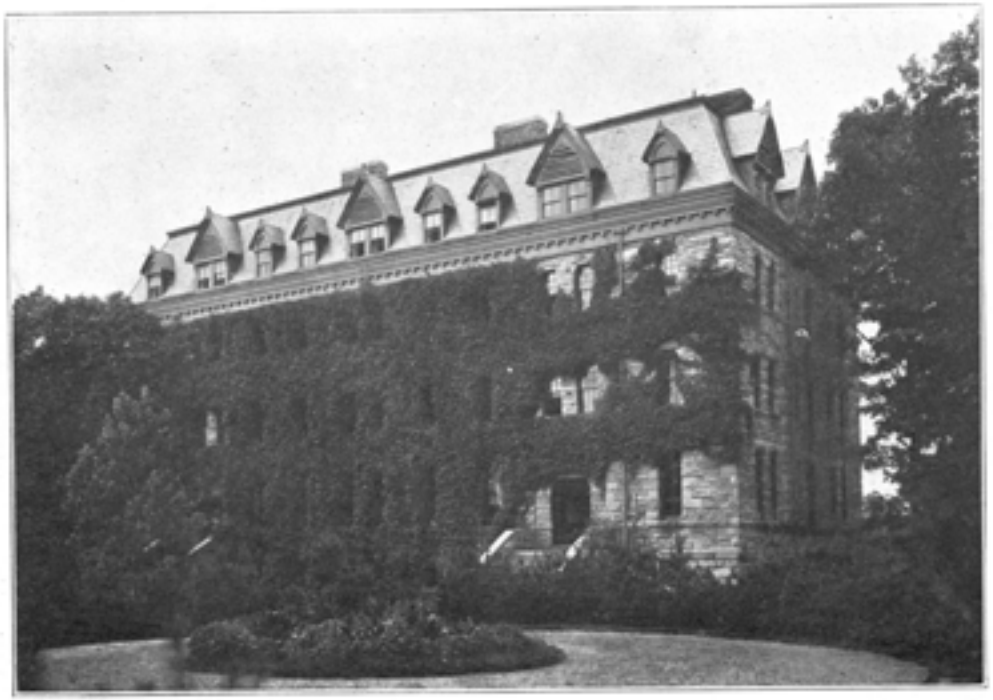

Mr. Gray

Coming to Sewanee in 1901 to accept a Professorship in the Theological Department, Mr. Gray then entered into the life and work of Sewanee. More and more during his seven years residence on the Mountain he has become identified with activities conducive to the welfare of Sewanee, studying the needs of the University and going far towards meeting them. His deep interest in the affairs of the student-body, in the sports and the various organizations, and his association with each student has won for him their friendship and esteem.

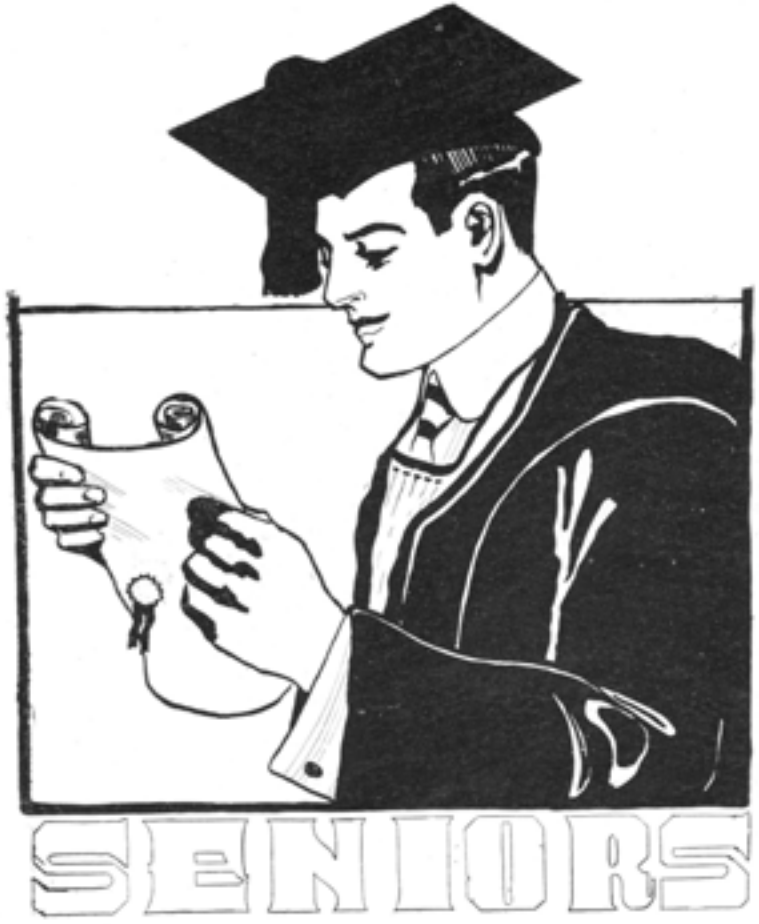

In September, 1908, Mr. Gray was chosen to succeed Mr. Guerry as Chaplain of the University. This has enabled him to become even more a leader and friend of the students.

THE work which is carried on by the students of the Theological Department in maintaining the missions in and around Sewanee is a phase of student activity which should not be overlooked, nor given a place of small importance. Students fill the places of officers and teachers, and also serve as Lay-readers in the Otey Memorial Church, Sewanee, and in Christ Church, Tracy City. Students also conduct and maintain Sunday schools and religious services in ten Missions: Epiphany, at Sherwood, St. Agnes, Cowan; St. James Missions at Lost Cove, Rush Creek and Natural Bridge; Missions at Battle Creek and at Jump Off; Calvary, Roark's Cove; St. Alban's, Coalmont; St. Paul's on the Mountain, Sewanee, (for the colored people). One of the Theologues conducts a service on Sunday afternoons at St. Mary's-on-the-Mountain, the Industrial School for girls, which is maintained by the Sisters of St. Mary.

This work is an important phase in the life of the Theological Students. By this work something of the stimulus of the college life is carried to the Mountaineer. Thus the "Theologues" are given active church work, and here receive stimulus for Domestic and Foreign Mission work.

Football Season of 1908

THOUGH it was full of soaring hopes and bitter disappointments the Season of Nineteen Hundred and Eight was nevertheless a successful one. The Mountain felt and still feels that Captain, Coach and Team gave to Sewanee the best there was in them. The entire Season was a fight against "hard luck." Misfortunes seemed to meet the Team at every turn both on the field and off. After tieing Virginia, and outplaying them at every point of the game, this same eleven men, exhausted from their two thousand-mile trip, went down in defeat before Auburn the following Saturday. With all hopes of the championship shattered, the Team accepted defeat like sportsmen, looking to the future to wipe out what hard luck had brought upon them. How well they redeemed themselves, the remaining scores show. In the Vanderbilt game, each man played probably the best game of his career. Having a touchdown scored on them by a fluke in the first half, they never lost heart, but came back harder. Lyne's run in the second half, which made the scorea tie, has been called by experts the greatest run in Southern Football. Captain Markley finished his career at Sewanee in a burst of glory. He was the ideal Captain, sacrificing always his own playing for the good of the Team. And yet he was considered by all the best full-back in the South.

Coach Van Surdam worked earnestly and conscientiously during his entire stay on the mountain and Sewanee has never seen a more gentlemanly Coach.

Head Coach Roper and Captain Dillon of the Princeton Team assisted in the coaching before the Vanderbilt game, as did Cope and Phillips of Sewanee fame. Sewanee owes to each an everlasting debt of gratitude.

And still whi'e worlds are lost and won,
And nations are subdued by arms,
And continents are over-run
With dire distress and war's alarms:
The only arms to domineer
And hold my world in thrall,
The only arms are —yours, my dear,
The potentest of all.

While the Full Moon Shines

"Bobby, I'm in love."

"O, shut up and go to bed. I've got Greek tomorrow and love doesn't mix well with it."

"Come on, loosen up and let me tell you about it. You're not used to so much work and need a rest." So Bob Wilson, athlete, society-man, and student pro tem, laid aside his book, removed his eyeshade and turned in his easy chair towards his roommate, who was leisurely changing his clothes for the solid comfort of pajamas.

"Well, let's have it," he said, lifting his feet upon the table and filling his pipe. "Is this the eleventh or twelfth since March?"

"I've got it sure enough this time, kid. She—"

"The devil you have," interrupted Bob with fine scorn, "you say that about them all. I'll give you about a week—not more."

Ignoring the interruption and blowing a cloud of smoke on his fingers in the fashion of cigarette fiends, Charley David continued:

"She's a queen, Bobby lad. No other word suits her. Golden hair, blue eyes—O, hell, I can't describe her—but you'll see her."

"Cut out the eulogy and give us some facts. Who is she, where's she from, when did she come, where's she staying?" Bobby fired at him in rapid succession.

"She's from down in your state somewhere—Miss Johnnie told me, but I forgot. And her name is Vernon."

"What—Alice Vernon?" asked Bob with some show of interest in his voice.

"That's it. Why?— Do you know her?"

"I've met her—she's from home. I heard the other day she was coming up. Guess it'll be up to me to call when exams are over."

Charley rose slowly from the lounge where he had been lying, whistled long and loud, and regarded Bobby with something very much akin to awe.

"So you've met her and didn't even mention her to us. I swear, Bobby, you are immune."

"O, I don't get fool about every pretty girl I meet like you and Jack Rambler," laughed Bob, good naturedly. "When did Miss Vernon come?"

"This afternoon at five. I met her 'round at Tuckers after supper. But I can't get over your having known her. I'm going to bed."

"Thank you. I've jawed long enough. Just at present I know about as much about this Greek as does a pig about side-pockets. "But, I say, Charley," he called as his chum was about to enter the bedroom, "show Miss Vernon a good time, won't you? See that she meets the nice fellows—"

"She met them tonight all right—dozens of them. I left her with Jack Rambler in the swing, and the rest gathered around gazing. Jack's got it worse than me—if that were possible."

"If you and Jack are going to be her suitors, I'm not worried about her good time. You might mention that I'm up to my eyes in work. She'll think it funny that I don't call—though I don't know her very well. Good-night," and he resumed his diligent perusal of the "trot."

Miss Alice Vernon, the girl who had played such havoc with Charley's heart, more than fulfilled Bob's prophecy as to her good time. The fact that she arrived on the mountain a week before commencement, in the midst of exams, detracted not at all from the attention paid her. Her suitors were many, gownsmen and junior alike succumbing to her charms. Many a freshman blanked an exam as a result of a date with Miss Vernon the previous evening and more than one degree was in imminent peril as a result of her bewitching smiles. Charley David and Jack Rambler were her most devoted attendants. They were law students, with exams behind them and nothing to do but kill time and, incidentally, help others to do the same. Either one or the other, often both, could be found at Tuckers at least seven-eighths of their waking hours. In their company Miss Vernon was initiated into all the delights of Sewanee, went into ecstasies over every view for miles around, saw the mountain from the top of Breslin, then saw it again from the depths of the valley. They got up moon-light picnics, informal dances, fudge parties, and the like in her honor. She avowed that she had never spent a happier week in her life, that Sewanee was the most delightful place in the whole world, and many other extravagances expressive of her enjoyment.

Both Jack and Charley confided the ups and downs of their suit to Bob Wilson. He was, so each would swear, the "best fellow in this or any other college," always ready to advise, congratulate or sympathize as circumstances might demand. They assured him many times of the pleasure he was missing and urged him to accompany them around to Tuckers. But Bob only profanely suggested that there was a warmer region than the one we now inhabit, further elucidating that no girl was going to make him "bust" on his degree.

The night before the last day of exams, Jack Rambler, happening in about nine-thirty, found Bob writing and smoking with great application, while the sheets of an English essay, a month over-due, lay scattered impartially on the table and floor. He hardly looked up as Jack dropped heavily into a chair, with something not far from a growl by way of salutation.

"I'm about the unluckiest fool that ever loved a girl." Jack's head was in his hands.

"O, come off that grouch, for crap's sake," replied Bob, laying down his pen and reaching for a match. "What's eating on you now?"

"Why, that darned lucky dog, Jack Rambler, has gone and got both the Hop and German with Miss Vernon," Jack burst out.

"Humph! the devil he has! That is tough. How d'you know he's got them? Did she say so?"

"I didn't have the nerve to ask her. But somebody's got them and of course it's him."

"Don't take it so hard. He'll probably loosen for some dances with her."

"Thank you for those kind words," Jack grunted and wandered aimlessly out of the room, with his hands deep in his pockets and such an expression on his face that one might well have thought him inthe grip of the R.E.'s—that awful bane of a college-man's life.

It was perhaps an hour later that Charley entered with a face even longer than Jack's had been.

"Stung, by all the gods!" he cried, slamming the door and throwing himself on the lounge.

"What's the matter, kid? Did she talk gruff to you?" jeered Bob.

"None of your infernal jollity. This is a darned serious affair. Why, dad blame it, I couldn't get either the Hop or the German with Miss Vernon." From his voice one would have thought he had lost his fortune, all his friends, his hopes of the future, and divers other things.

"What? Well, I swear! Who's got them—Jack?"

"Of course—the confounded hog. But I was an ass to wait so long to ask her."

"You get the credit of asking, anyway," said Bob, in an attempt to be comforting.

"Now, that is a hell of a lot of consolation, isn't it?" the other growled, sarcastically.

"Say, Charley, has Miss Vernon ever mentioned me?" asked Bob. He was blowing rings of smoke upwards and following them with his eyes. "Believe she did say she'd met you and danced with you. Seems to me she said you were a pretty good dancer, too. "When are you going around?"

"Just as soon as these cursed exams are over. Just think, kiddo! If that sweet boy Percy will just loosen with a measley little seventy tomorrow, I'll be a Bachelor of Arts—get my "goat hide" which I've been seeking these many moons. I'm through everything else. Tomorrow I'll be afree man. Maybe I'm not going to blossom out and do stunts in the social whirl! You lazy law "studes" don't realize what it is to be shut up and girls coming in on every train—especially a man of my social propensities—ahem!"

"O, I know. Its what Sherman said war was. "Let me tell you, Bob," Jack went on, "If you say so, I'll take you around to see Miss Vernon when you get time to go. I've been telling her lots about you—and then, you see, I've got on pretty good terms with her lately and she'd probably treat you a little nicer if you went with me."

"Thank you, old man. There's something in that and I'll take you up on it sometime. But this isn't passing English. I've got to finish this up and get some sleep or I'll be a physical wreck," and he turned again to his book while Charley continued to gaze at the ceiling, puffed moodily at his empty pipe, and meditated upon his abnormally hard luck.

Dropping into the Crow's Nest a couple of days later, Charley found Jack with his chair tipped back, thoughtfully sipping a lemon-sour.

"Hello, have a drink?"

"Just going to get one. Got a check, though." Charley procured a "dope" at the fountain and then drew up a chair beside his friend. Then he began:

"Look here, Jack, why did you act such a hog? You might have given me one of those dances with The Lady."

"Don't rub it in. It seems to me you're the hog, since you took them both."

"What do you mean, you bonehead? Haven't you got both the Hop and German with Miss Vernon?" Charley rose excitedly to his feet.

"You're mighty tootin' I haven't. Thought you had them." Jack was also excited. Charley collapsed into his chair with a look of utter perplexity on his face. "Well, what do you know about that?" he said. "Then, Jack, who in the name of all fired hell has got them? For she's surely got dates for both."

"So I also discovered. You can search me. Might be "Rooster Green." He's been giving her an awful rush."

"Couldn't be him. His Texas girl is coming for the German—and he's taking Miss Cone to the Hop—that little black-eyed beauty 'round at Crazy Corner."

"That Freshman King is another possibility," Jack surmised.

"Don't believe he'd have the nerve to zuke us. I can't think who it is. Guess we'll find out to-night. Who're you taking?"

"Stagging. Nobody else I care to take. What about you?"

"Same here. Let's drift to Hoffman. I've got to cleanse myself."

"Think I'll stick around Tucker's awhile. See you tonight."

"Sure." Charley disappeared up University Avenue while Jack sauntered in the direction of Tuckers.

It was Commencement Day, the official exercises were over, and the really enjoyable features of Commencement began that night with the Hop. A very few minutes after nine, Jack Rambler, in faultless evening dress, coming in the front door of Tuckers, met Charley David, likewise attired, who had entered from the rear. They had both come down in the hope of getting a few minutes with Miss Vernon before her partner came.

"What in the deuce are you doing here?" asked Charley.

"Probably the same thing you are," laughed Jack. "Wonder where The Lady is?" They looked in the parlor and on the piazza, but she was not to be seen.

"Don't guess she's come down yet."

"Might be in the swing. I see something white out there. Let's investigate." So they went out to the swing. To their great delight they found Miss Vernon; and to their amazement they found—Bob Wilson!

"Why, its Jack and Charley," cried Bob, and "Good evening, Mr. Rambler—and Mr. David," said the girl extending a hand to each; "won't you sit down?"

"Sure, sit down," urged Bob," we're not going over for a little while yet. I've got something to tell you fellows anyway, and this is a good time."

Though very much taken back at Bob's calm appropriation of what they considered their rights, nevertheless, they sat down.

"Can I tell them, Alice?" asked Bob. And a very shy voice answered "Yes."

"Then congratulate me, fellows, for Alice has promised to marry me next month. We've been engaged since Christmas."

The chimes of Breslin slowly struck the quarter, and out towards Beckwith's Point, the full moon shone through the trees like a great red ball.

Now What Do You Think of That?

She swore that she loved me and offered her lips
As a seal to the pledge that we pledged one another.
God! How the blood ran to my fool finger tips!
And how my head swam at the touch of her lips!
And we swore—aye, we swore, no disaster should smother,
That God-given love that we love one another!
But Fancy is fitful and ladies I trow
Lend ear to his councils—facetious adviser,
For say! In a week she had broken her vow
And I am a little bit wiser—now
Yes, I am a little bit wiser.

The Ballad of the Headless Gownsman

The hour was not of Thursday night.
 Nor yet of Friday morn;
But 'twas the time when night is dead,
 The morning still unborn.

The moon discovered not a cloud
 Except the milky way.
A sombre, weird, and wizard light
 Did make a semi-day.

And long, lean shadows lay around
 From statuary trees,
As masts of vessels, in the calm,
 Reflected on the seas.

And I was slowly walking on,
 Affected by the gloom.
Agustine's Chapel, on my right,
 Seemed truly 'Gustine's tomb.

Dark, solemn, dull it looked—as it
 Stood in the moonlight there.
I glanced at it, unconsciously,
 And then—I stopped to stare.

There was a man in front of it,
 A Gownsman, still as dead.
I looked at him—I looked again,
 My God! He had no head!

My feet stopped going—my blood stopped flowing,
 My muscles petrified.
I stood and stared—and never dared
 To move to either side.

At last, full dazed, a foot I raised,
 And feebly tried to go;
But all in vain—I must remain,
 A voice, unheard, said "No."

Then with a stately, measured tread,
 The Spirit moved to me;
Closer, closer came it, and
 More clearly could I see.

It was a man without a head;
 He wore a draping gown.
One hand was pointed straight at me,
 The other pointed down.

And as he slowly drew to me,
 I slowly drew to him.
Unable to resist I went,
 My sight began to dim.

The finger pointing to me, said,
 "On earth no longer dwell,
I need your life, I'll send you to"—
 The downward hand said—"Hell."

We moved until a foot or so
 Was 'tween his hand and me.
The finger, level with my face,
 Was all my eyes could see.

And then I heard a hollow voice,
 I saw no human face,
Yet words I heard, and they were real,
 They came from empty space.

In dreadful tones the Spectre spoke:
 "I've waited long for you,
They took my head—I need one, and
 I think that yours will do."

Two bony hands reached out at me,
 O God, they seized my head!
And I, till now so stiff and stark,
 All limp and loose—fell dead.

Came then a dream—I saw a stream,
 Of boiling blood 'twas full.
I stood alone, in a boat of bone,
 'Twas made of a monster skull.

The current rushed me onwards 'tween
The sun-lit, shining shores,
All full of ghastly, grinning heads
Piled high in countless scores.

I looked askance, in horror, at
The endless, awful scene.
I heard sweet, magic music notes,
With discords in between.

And then I woke—I lay all limp.
'Twas just at breaking dawn.
I raised my hands and felt, and felt,
O God! My head was gone!

He had it, he had taken it,
That demon in the gown.
I cursed him—then I heard a laugh;
In mockery resound.

I stayed, deep buried under earth,
For one entire week,
And in that time, I oft resolved
Another head to seek.

So on each Thursday night in June,
The day and month I died,
I promenade the Chapel yard,
I'm led by an unseen guide.

I'm waiting, and I'm waiting, and
Some night, 'tween one and nine,
There's sure to come, unthinkingly,
A man with head like mine.

I'll charm him with a magic spell,
I'll make him stand and stare.
And then I'll steal his head away
And leave him lying there.

And he will then rove 'round at night
As I, without a head;
While I shall fly, far, far away
To live with the happy dead.

Ah, Which is Which?

"Ah, which is which?"—the murmur sped
And even I grew interested,
Despite the sea and "mal-de-mer,"
As those twin sisters, young and fair,
Appeared on deck with lightsome tread.
Were Venus' lips so full, so red?
Had one been Venus' self instead,
Yet, still would I have cried, "I swear
"Ah, which is which?"

They passed me close; about each head
A glorious, golden halo spread;
Ne'er have I seen such glorious hair,
I wondered much and gazing there
Repeated what the rest had said,
"Ah, which is switch?"

Ode to a Good Dinner

Hence loathed Osteopathy,
Thou lean inhospitable trade
That breakest not of well-fed men and sleek,
But hast not aught of sympathy
And rubbeth only those digestions frayed
To a disgusting slimness.
But come and greet me, maiden fair,
Thou Grace of Memory with rosy cheek,
Sweet and undulled with sourness.
Come and sit beside me, take this easy chair—
Dilate and dimple with your smiles,
And spread to the mind's eye a bill of fare—
Perfected in itself, served with your wiles.

Lines and Rimericks

To Tabby

Of all the teachers in the towered city,
And believe me, friends, they are of many sorts,
Who crack their jokes and fondly think them witty,
By far the worst, they say, is Tabby Nauts.
How many Freshmen his sly tongue exhorts
To learn their Latin forms, that they may leave
With whiskered Noll respective good reports,
The fruit of many months with "Gildersleeve."
And while they toil deluded by his shoax,
The lean professor smiles, cracks and recracks his jokes.

With solemn air, complacent Ananias
He musters up his suite of hoary tales,
Relates with a touch of learned bias.
Succeed? What Latin teacher ever fails?
This is the time the prudent hails,
This is the chance to remedy his troubles,
For zeros slump where flattery prevails
And disappear but like so many bubbles.
And still does Mr. Nauts hold daily classes;
The student laughs, and laughing, duly passes.

Have you read "The Boy's Percy?"

Authority on all forms of athletics, licensed punster, Freshman's Bugaboo, and divers other things. Who? "Nobody knows." "Somebody tell him."

The louder you laugh at Dr. Swiggett's jokes, the better mark you get in French.

Harvey (on the Origin of Species): "Man descended from the ape, the ape descended from the tree; therefore man is a vegetable. Gentlemen, I appeal to your intelligence, is not Palmer a cabbage-head?"

Lord Berry (reciting in Phil. 2): "William of Auvergne was born in 1668, wrote some excellent treatises on various subjects, and died in 1669."

Dr. B-sc--ts: "Very good, sir."

Pandemonium—Freshman English under Father Noll.

Father Noll: "I am the oldest member of Sigma Epsilon."
Freshman English: "Speech! Speech!"

Father Noll: "You boys are breaking the honor system."
The Freshmen were so choked with grief that they could only sob.

Father Noll: "The boy who did that will please leave the room."
A stampede for the door.

Parson Gray (in a jocular mood): "Well, I'm going to seat this class according to good looks."

Voice from the extreme rear of the room: "Here's your seat back here, sir."

When Dr. Swiggett tells a story, the class invariably whistles for "the little dog."

Our beloved Dean
Will vent his spleen
On who so dares to state
That his wobbly legs—
Ridiculous pegs!
Are not perfectly straight.

On February 18, the Philosophy Club met with Mr. Harvey and the discussion was very enjoyable to all. Owing to the exceeding beauty of the mountain under the light of the full moon, all the members except Dr. B-s-c--ts were absent, investigating the Theory of Nature, so strongly advocated by Aristotle.

At the next meeting of the Club, the following interesting and instructive subject will be discussed: "Was Duns Scotus really a dunce?" This subject will probably call forth some brilliant expositions of philosophical thought.

Sewanee's candidate for President of the Ananias Club is Prof. Coleson. Let us rally to his support and make his election unanimous.

Proprietor of Sewanee Inn: "Where'd you find that 'Not to be Used except in case of fire' placard that those college boys stole?"

Clerk: "They'd placed it over the Hoffman Coal-bin."

Pretty Girl: "How does that Freshman keep that ridiculous skull-cap on his head?"

Wise Soph: "By the vacuum process."

P. G.: "I suppose you must know. You were a Freshman yourself last year, were you not?"

Guaranteed Cure for Insomnia—Philosophy 2.

At the lecture hour on March 4, Philosophy 2, with a full attendance, adjourned to the Supply Store to get returns from the Inauguration. When they learned that Mr. Taft had been unanimously inaugurated, they cheered vociferously.

The University of the South

Sewanee, Tennessee

THE UNIVERSITY is under the joint control of eighteen dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Opened in 1868. Located at Sewanee, Tennessee, on the Cumberland Mountains, two thousand feet above the level of the sea, and about one thousand feet above the surrounding valleys. The scenery is beautiful, the climate is salubrious, and the inhabitants are especially exempt from malarial and pulmonary complaints. Sewanee has a national reputation as a health resort. The atmosphere, even in the hot season, is delightful and well adapted to the requirements of a Summer School. The following departments of the University are well equipped and fully organized with a thoroughly efficient corps of professors:

Academic, Theological, Medical, Law, Pharmaceutical, Engineering

¶ While Sewanee's claim to stand for training in classical and literary culture is justified by the large number of alumni who have attained to prominence in journalism and literature, many are successful in business, and several are engaged in the practice of architecture. ¶ Through the generosity of a beneficiary, an offer has been made for the building of a $60,000 Science Hall, which, when completed and properly equipped, will fill a long-felt need in the broader growth of the University. ¶ The SEWANEE GRAMMER SCHOOL prepares boys for this and other Universities and for business. ¶ Trinity Term, 1909, begins July 5th; Advent Term, 1909, begins September 19th; Lent Term, 1910, begins March 19th. Vacation from the middle of December to the middle of March, instead of during the Summer months. ¶ For catalogue and other information address
